* This graphic design spells: C-A-R-M-E-N. During a unit where one wall of a high school classroom was transformed into a New York City subway line to display students' visual-autobiographical narratives, Tito showed me how to use this rhetoric to re-script my writing for his audience. Some may regard "Tito's Style" in my professional disposition and portfolio as an indicator that I do not fully understand the academy's forms, standards, and expectations. On the contrary, I know these rules and genres very well--- I simply question their replication. I ground a different set of discourses and cultural politics for my teaching, writing, and research. Tito is always part of those processes because he reminds me to always notice how and when such distinct and sophisticated aesthetic and intellectual identities/histories are systematically displaced.
